

I haven't seen much about what might be called the "making of", but in this case I think it really matters. This is a cult YouTube channel that has grown in popularity over the past five years. The channel has 410,000 subscribers and displays an average of 295,000 views per video. It was started in 2007 by sisters Anna Khachiyan and Masha Khachiyan who are natives of Moscow. The video "What is your shoe size? якты кэукудэульык?" alone has up to 400k views with 4k thumbs up and only 8 thumbs down. This video was uploaded in 2010 and it has been viewed 23 Million times as of 11/12/16. In the description box, Siberian Mouse explains that this is a "test video" and will be "removed", but she also says it made her sisters popular with the boys. The channel has grown to become an international activity ensuring popularity not only in Russia but expanded to the United States as well as Australia, Brazil, Germany and Italy. Over time they granted interviews on various TV channels including Russian International Television (RT) and posted videos featuring different languages such as English. They often release "Russian Beauty Challenge" videos in which they show off their beauty and physical prowess in various activities such as dancing, beauty contests, and working out. They also have a clothing line called "Siberian Mouse Trading" with an online store where you can purchase their clothing. In this video they establish who is behind the channel and introduce the viewer to Anna and Masha Khachiyan. The sisters make several appearances throughout the series. This video was uploaded in 2011 and it has been viewed 5 Million times as of 11/12/16. In the video they pretty much explain that you need to be in a computer lab at 5am which is when they record their videos, otherwise it's very boring. They also mention that the public doesn't understand how difficult it is for them to make content because their hands are inside the computer at 5am. There are multiple appearances throughout the series. This video was uploaded in 2015 and it has been viewed 6 Million times as of 11/12/16.
